CAPTIONS AND SUBTITLES

What would we do without them?
What’s your story?

“I like subtitles. I can watch the movie, skip the book, and not feel guilty.”

DID YOU SAY...

THERE ARE NO SUBTITLES?!
What is a subtitle?

Text translation of the source language of the video that shows up on screen; linked to a time code that matches a certain point of time within the video

CAPTIONS
(also called closed-captions)

- Commonly used as a service to aid deaf and hearing-impaired audiences
- It is a transcription of what is being said (same language as the audio)

SUBTITLES

- Most frequently used as a way of translating a medium into another language
- It is a translation from a foreign language to the own language
Subtitling best practices

- Adaptation is needed (transform a spoken word into a written word) – removing “junk words”; you are not translating word-by-word, but rendering meaning

  Speech: Speed wins is kind of a great concept
  Subtitle: Speed wins is a great concept

- Subtitle appears on the screen when the person starts speaking and disappears when the person stops speaking

- Subtitles should be as “invisible” as possible – they should not take the viewer’s eyes away from the screen
Position

Horizontal, bottom of the screen (1/3), aligned to center

Incorrect

Correct
Breaking a subtitle into two lines

Do not divide semantic and grammatical units
(set expressions, adjective+noun, etc.)

Four Golden Rules

- 2-line rule
- 40-character rule
- 6-second rule
- “Gap” rule
2-line rule

Subtitles cannot have more than 2 lines, and the higher line should be shorter than the lower line. Every rule about subtitle layout is designed to make subtitles legible, but not cover too much of the image.

Incorrect

Correct
40-character rule

One line of a subtitle has a 40-character limit. This one is for Latin alphabet, 35 for Cyrillic alphabet, 14 for double-byte languages (Japanese and Korean), 16 for Chinese characters.

Incorrect (54 characters)

6-second rule

A subtitle should not be on the screen for more than 6 seconds (otherwise the reader starts re-reading the subtitle) or for less than 1.5 seconds (otherwise the reader will not have enough time to read it).

The “gap” rule

There should be a small gap between subtitles – 0.125 sec
